‘APPI Storytelling Day’

Welcome to the first APPI meeting exclusively focused on Storytelling, welcome to Escola Secundária Fontes Pereira de Melo, in Porto. APPI are most happy to organise this event which has been made possible only thanks to the significant support of the Agrupamento de Escolas Fontes Pereira de Melo Executive Board, our local member and teacher Eduarda Varzim, who has kindly and efficiently liaised with her school Board, and the team of qualified, dedicated speakers, who have answered APPI’s call for the event.

This Seminar has been acknowledged by APPIforma – APPI’s CPD Centre – as a 6-hour professional development event, which is considered to be relevant for the purposes officially stated for the career of both Early Childhood Educators and Basic and Secondary Teachers.

Quoting Andrew Wright, the acclaimed key-note speaker, who opens this meeting on STORIES and how central they are to being human: “There is a common notion that ‘stories are for children’. This is laughable nonsense if it is implied they are ‘only’ for children. Societies and all parts of societies are guided in their aims and in their daily decision making by their ‘stories’… these ‘story maps’ are called ‘narratives’ by observers. This fundamental look at stories is not dry but, I believe, rich in its vision for the huge number of roles for stories in language teaching.”

In line with the exclusive topic chosen for this event, speakers were kindly invited to develop it as they saw suitable, particularly by sharing with the Seminar delegates their own perspectives on a variety of issues pertaining to the topic, such as how central stories, irrespective of their format, are to one’s thinking, irrespective of one’s age; effective ways to implement stories in language teaching; exploring intercultural stories; using digital storytelling tools; revisiting a highly successful APPI and British Council joint project – ‘BritLit’ – focused on teaching British short stories in our schools; ways of dealing with stories ‘in the classroom to increase empathy, build a strong classroom community and encourage learners to pay attention to the stories around them’; ‘how injustice and other challenging global issues are addressed through telling wisdom tales from the world’s oral cultures’, among other storytelling issues under focus.

APPI’s heartfelt thanks are also due to all sponsors, exhibitors, Simphonia das Letras bookshop, and those involved both in the preparation and running of this event for their significant help and goodwill granted.

The APPI Executive Committee wishes delegates and speakers a high-quality, inspiring Storytelling Day.

Opening Plenary - Auditorium

ANDREW WRIGHT |ILI – International Languages Institute, Godollo, HUNGARY / Oxford University Press author

The Centrality of Stories in our Lives
I will show how deep our need to make and tell stories really is. This will provide suggestions for a wide variety of kinds of story. It will also bring home that stories are not 'just for entertainment and really for little children'. Stories are massively central to our thinking whatever age we are.

Stories for a healthy mind
Once upon a time, resilience, perseverance and emotional well-being were part of the 'hidden curriculum', but now they are explicit goals. They are also themes and outcomes of many stories for young and old alike. In this workshop, we address learner needs and explore teacher strategies which nurture 'emotional literacy' in the ELT classroom and beyond.

Was It Worth It?
'BritLit' was created in 2002 to meet urgent demands from English language teachers faced with teaching British short stories in schools. As a joint APPI and British Council project, it quickly became an international success. This presentation will look at the original ideas for the project and will attempt to measure their success and any evidence of its effect on current practices. This will be presented as a talk followed by questions and answers.

"I am a story. You are a story."
We use stories to find aspects of ourselves in others, and aspects of others in ourselves. Stories connect us. But where do we find them? In this practical session, we'll be looking at a variety of stories, where they come from, and ways of using them with our learners to increase empathy, build a strong classroom community and encourage our learners to pay attention to the stories around them.

The Importance of Storytelling
In order to lead an authentic life, I believe we need to develop the ability to tell our own story accurately and profoundly. And I also believe that the best training for learning to do that is reading (or hearing) wonderful and intelligent stories written by other people. But does our modern world offer us that opportunity?
